Courtney Bae

London-based Courtney Jinsook Bae is a Korean American artist and creative director. Bae credits her longstanding exposure to the fashion industry's ever dynamic visual array as a source of vibrant inspiration to her fine arts practice. Her works are filled with fearless provocation and yet we are left feeling energised and excited. Bae's handling of the human form challenges the traditional by celebrating a crude ugliness - Bae refers to her work as being, "just ugly enough to be beautiful".

As a child, Bae's first encounters with visual arts came from her father's expressive Chinese brushstroke paintings. Her own explorations began mainly in watercolour but quickly expanded to include oils. Her early oil works were mainly expressionistic portraiture, but her more recent works have begun to steer towards a more organic deconstructed style. She is best known for her large scale oil works that flirt between abstract figurative and abstract expressionism. At times her works even recall street art influences. Bae often works on commercial collaborations where she achieves a more nuanced and delicate feel, often with works on paper or digital animation. Across various media, Bae has garnered recognition for her play between the intricate and the laissez-faire, always with a hint of the familiar.
